N>If memory serves me, we are required to ident every 10 minutes, and N>also at the end of an exchange. Many times I'll hear two people N>finish a QSO, usually on a repeater, and each will say something like N>XXXXX this is XXXXX, each giving the other persons call and then their N>own. I didn't realize the FCC rules required us to repeat each others N>callsigns! So if they don't have to do this, why do they, and will N>I receive friction from others if I don't do it as well? I have N>enough to memorize as a software developer without having to commit N>calls to memory so I can repeat them at QSO's end!

Write down the other guys call as you hear it. This also is a plus for entering the QSO into a log.

I am new so I can not remember the calls yet. But as I talk to people more and more I am remembering calls and modulation. So I expect that this will get easier over time
